

Nursery under BBC spotlight

GOING FOR GOLD: Holden Clough's John Foley and Kate Lawson during filming. (s)

PREPARATION for the prestigious Tatton Park Flower Show by local plant specialists Holden Clough Nursery will be captured for an upcoming feature on the BBC's "Gardener's World".

The Tatton Park display will feature summer perennials including Crocoshmia's from the nursery's specialist collection, as well as Achilleas, Astilbes and a variety of other summer blooms.

Owner of Holden Clough, John Foley said: "After getting a place at last year's show with just two days notice, this year we've had much longer to plan and have been growing many plants especially for the show. After achieving a silver gilt award last year, we're definitely aiming higher this year."

The team from Gardener's World have spent a day at the nursery filming preparations for the flower show, but also looking at how the business has been built up to becoming one of the country's leading specialist nurseries and also features advice from John and his team for the viewers.

John continued: "It will be great to share our knowledge with such a wide TV audience and the film crew will also be following us to the show to see what medal we manage to come away with, so we better make sure it's a gold!"